Morning Oregonian.

VOL. XXIII. PORTLAND, OREGON, SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 17, 18[illegible] NO. 7107.

GENERAL NEWS.

[illegible] Fog Interrupts Telegraph Workings Throughout the West.

The Oregon Short Line to Reach Shoshone by March 1st.

[illegible]ssion of the Morgan Steamship Line by the Southern Pacific.

SPECIAL DISPATCHES TO THE OREGONIAN.

CHICAGO, Feb 16.—The Western Union [illegible] says the demoralization of the lines is complete. [illegible] extends from Buffalo to Omaha and from St. [illegible] to Cairo. The poles themselves are [illegible] in some localities, and the [illegible] such rapid escape of the electric fluid and [illegible] induction that when the wires are [illegible] can with difficulty be done. A speedy relief is expected, however, as the atmospheric conditions are improving. In the west the temperature is [illegible], being at zero at Cheyenne and only nine above at Omaha. Seldom has there been so long and so continuous a prostration as during the past two or three weeks.

Terrible Mining Accident.

CHICAGO, Feb 16.—A special to the News from [illegible] says a mine at Braidwood, a mining town sixty miles south of this place caved in and [illegible] seventy-five men. A subsequent dispatch to the same paper says forty-five of these miners are drowned.

CHICAGO, Feb. 17, 2 A. M.—The report of the mining disaster is confirmed. Three hundred men were at work and sixty-two were instantly drowned or smothered by the caving in of the earth. The accident was caused by the weight of water over the [illegible] in which they were working. On account of [illegible] prostration of wires no full report can be obtained to-night.

Open to Shoshone March 1.

CHICAGO, Feb 16.—J. W. Morse, general passenger agent of the Union Pacific railroad, is in the city. The company will open the Oregon Short Line to Shoshone, Idaho, which is the junction with the Wood River branch, March 1st, the distance being [illegible] miles from the junction of the Short Line with the main line at Granger, Wyoming territory. Stage lines into the southern Idaho mining regions, which now run from Kelton, Utah, and Blackfoot, Idaho, will then run from Shoshone. Work is pushed westward from Shoshone towards Boise and Baker cities. It is expected, however, that the [illegible] will stop short some [illegible] miles this side of Baker City, at Snake river, at which point connection will be made with the Oregon system of roads. [illegible] men are at work upon the Wood river branch running 60 miles from Shoshone to Hailey. This distance 45 miles is already graded and a locomotive is expected at Hailey June 1st. From this point several narrow gauge roads are projected to the mining regions of Wood river districts.

Morgan Steamship Line Bought by the Southern Pacific.

NEW YORK, Feb 17.—A stockholder says the terms of the purchase of the Morgan steamship line by [illegible] for the Southern Pacific syndicate are not made known, but it is generally believed that [illegible] stock of the Morgan company is [illegible] subject to a mortgage of $800,000 [illegible] of steam ships on the Morgan line, [illegible] over 300 miles of railroad valuable [illegible] Galveston and New Orleans, and [illegible] of stock in the Houston and Texas Central company. The impression is [illegible] the stock of the last named company was [illegible], but parties who know something of the estate say this is impossible, [illegible] control was the [illegible] in the treasury of the Morgan company under mortgage, which is [illegible] property of Mrs. Morgan. The stock of the [illegible] company has a par value of $10,000,000 and [illegible] controlled by [illegible] of questionable [illegible] the Southern Pacific combination.

The Mutual Union Affairs.

NEW YORK, Feb. 16.—The Express says a rumor is current that the Mutual Union Company intended to [illegible] its stock from $10,000,000 to $4,000,000 and the matter had been under consideration [illegible] action taken. There had been a suggestion that the reduction of stock would obviate a number of difficulties, which had to some extent embarrassed the company. The suggestion of a reduction immediately aroused the interest in the Western Union lease which had been announced as [illegible] of 1½ per cent. on all stock. Inquiry [illegible] the fact that the Western Union Company [illegible] $150,000 per annum on account of the [illegible] stock and $500,000 for Mutual Union [illegible] and interest on Mutual Union bonds, [illegible] to be paid in stock, a fixed sum independent of the amount of stock.

The Old Story.

[illegible], Feb 16.—Lizzie McDaniel, a popular [illegible] belle, died from the effects of medicines given her by her young seducer. She was taken by him to a small, dark dingy room, where her parents [illegible] deserted by the villainous loafer Charles [illegible]. She gave birth to a child whereupon her [illegible] became insane. Before dying Lizzie exacted [illegible] from the whole family that her destroyer [illegible] injured. She was a beautiful and accomplished [illegible], the idol of parents and friends who [illegible] crushed.

Hubbell and Ferry.

NEW YORK, Feb 16.—Jay Hubbell in an interview [illegible] positively the statement he had offered [illegible] in the alleged money into the thousands to [illegible] Ferry. He had tried to get control of the [illegible] representation [illegible] it to beat Ferry. He had to pay to Church $1000 for creating an anti Ferry sentiment, but specified no way in which Church was to act. In fact Church was against Ferry any way.

Probably "Gaged" the Reporter.

NEW YORK, Feb. 16.—Wall street ridicules the [illegible] story of Jay Gould's intended yacht excursion, it being a well known fact that he cannot sail [illegible] Staten Island on a windy day without being sea sick. It is thought Gould allowed the reporter of the Times, which has been abusing him for years, to fill a column with a mass of absurdities just to show his contempt for its past course.

No One to Blame.

CHICAGO, Feb 16.—In the matter of the accident near Flint, Michigan, an inquest over the body of [illegible] Beeman, the only person killed, resulted in a verdict exonerating the officers and employes of the road from blame, as the accident was unavoidable, the rail breaking as the train was passing over it. None of the wounded were dangerously hurt, and with the exception of Mr. Webb arrived here this evening. There were 16 passengers on the train.

Chicago Contributing.

CHICAGO, Feb 16.—Mayor Harrison having received appeals from New Albany, Jeffersonville and other cities on the Ohio river, has issued an address to Churches, business men and others to subscribe liberally to meet the exigencies of the occasion.

Michigan Wheat and Cattle.

LANSING, Feb 16.—January official returns indicate all kinds of cattle in fine condition in the state. Most correspondents express fear that wheat has been injured more or less by freezing and thawing, or been smothered by deep snows. 7,751,000 bushels were marketed from August to January.

Heavy Failure.

[illegible] in assignment for the benefit of creditors by Matthew Armstrong and [illegible] Armstrong, [illegible] the firm of Wm. Armstrong & Co., dealers in leather and findings, to Matthew A. Vanwickle. [illegible] Liabilities $451,30[illegible]; nominal assets $[illegible]; actual, $132,108.

Ferry's Strength gone to Pieces.

LANSING, Mich. Feb 16.—The senatorial vote was [illegible] Ferry [illegible] Newton [illegible] 16. Nobody else above 11. Second ballot no material change [illegible] Ferry had 12. Adjourned.

The end of the track is now at [illegible] place at upper end of Horse plains, arriving at that point on Monday of this week.

POLISH POLITICS.

[illegible] Feeling of Russia's [illegible] Neighboring Government.

[illegible]

[illegible] take the [illegible]. It is the oldest of the Slav states and it had for many centuries an independent government. It has much of the machinery of a constitutional government now. Large districts in this part of the country for many years belonged to Poland but they never belonged to Little Russia. South Russia does not want to be attached to [illegible] nor be one a part of Poland but wants to have a government for themselves and they will get it in time. But these questions are of grave importance and [illegible] be touched upon without entering into many historical explanations.

Is there not antipathy to the Russian people in Poland?

I admit there is antipathy toward the government while between Russians and Poles there is rarely much sympathy. In 1863 the Russian government tried and succeeded to some extent in creating a feeling against Poland, claiming that she was against the Russian people, that it was the policy of Russia to represent Poland as representing the Occidental influence or gate through which western Europe should enter Russia. It is of Asiatic and eastern European origin and will resist all western European influences and in this she has the sympathy of all Slavic people but now this impression has been corrected. They are afraid of the influence of Germany, France and Austria to-day. There is good feeling between all the Slavic nations. There is a strong feeling against the influence of England and in the Austrian part of Poland there is little feeling against the Austrian government.

Suppose Poland should assume the relation to Russia that now exists between Hungary and the Austrian Poles?

"She would not like it and would not permit it for the reason that it would be the same kind of relation that Russia has to Germany. It would be lost in a larger government. On these questions however it is the policy as it is the duty of Poland to keep quiet. There is a great deal of sympathy between the Poles and Gen. Melikoff, an influential but not a brilliant man. Skobeleff was a humbug so far as the pan-slavic influence is concerned. Schouvaloff is the strongest man the Russians have. He is a conservative man and represents the German influence in Russian politics. He represents the traditions of the Russo-German party and was quietly mixed up in the German alliance, was the tool of Bismarck just as Alexander II. was under the influence of Bismarck. He had no sympathy with the pan slavics. Alexander III. is not as strong as his father. He will be a tool in the hands of men like Ignatieff. He has no prestige at all. It has been his policy to keep him in the back ground. He was governed for a long time by his old teacher, who is an old orthodox Russian and very narrow.

How much sympathy is there between the Polish agitators and nihilism?

None at all. The nihilistic movement is entirely foreign to us. The men of Poland have history that reaches far back and they have something to recover. The nihilists have no history whatever and nothing to recover. They are pure destructionists. This socialistic question is not with us as the agitation in Poland is political in its true sense. It is in relation to the affairs of the country, not the relations of the people in Poland. The people are attached to family and tenacious of their individual rights. In Russia the people are strongly impregnated with the theory of existence in communes or independent villages, where the community dictates what the people shall do, and from this has come the nihilistic movement. You in this country call nihilists socialists. You do not understand the destructionists movement there. In the nihilists party there are thousands of intelligent men who have no sympathy with assassins. The nihilists are the extreme left of the revolutionary party. In Russia there are two parties—one merely political, the other socialistic. For some time they worked together, but now they are really separate. The nihilists have no field for operations in Poland. It is not a manufacturing district but a fine agricultural country. All socialism that comes from Poland comes from the west, and partakes of the German and French character, but we have very little of it. Among the extremists there is more of the spirit of self sacrifice than Ignatieff has. I don't know him personally, but it looks to me very much as though he was talking simply for effect.

In case the revolutionists carry out their programme as to a constitutional government would the Russian people cling together?

I would not think so. Poland and Little Russia want to be independent. Both want to be free from Great or Moscow Russia. The most intelligent would like the idea of confederation of the slavic states, but the slavs hate the serfs and Bulgarians hate the serfs. They are not yet brought up to common interests. They have individual interests. Any scheme looking to a representative or confederate government is a long way off, because of this lack of common interests.

How are you pleased with your reception in this country? asked the reporter.

Very much, indeed. We have been treated very kindly everywhere.

"Are you so much pleased as to be willing to make this country your home?

"I think so. If it were only to satisfy my selfish desires, I should go to California and spend the rest of my days, after the countess finishes the year's tour as she wishes before retiring from the stage, but there are other things to be considered. I am an American citizen now. There are duties to my country which I owe, however, and I must be willing to do that which will benefit her and her people most. There are comparatively few of my people in this country and I suppose I would be more successful in a career in this country than in any other, but as I said I cannot think only of what is for myself and mine. We feel that we would like to locate permanently where we may be of most use to our people. I certainly believe in Poland as the Poland of the future."

This was said very quietly but with the earnestness of a man who meant every word he said. The count courteously resisted all attempts to draw out reminiscences of his own adventures and experiences in his political life in Europe. He spoke willingly and with a marked moderation and clear[illegible] of Polish affairs, forgetting himself in the interest of his subject.

The Spring Valley Water Company['s] [illegible] Towards San Francisco.

San Francisco Flour Dealers to Follow Portland's Example.

[illegible]

[illegible] largely increased supply demanded by San Francisco yearly has almost exhausted [illegible] company [illegible] water [illegible] at an expense of $150,000 [illegible] also state that they believed the supply [illegible] realize the importance of [illegible] Crystal Springs [illegible] the revenue upon this expenditure [illegible] would not [illegible] existing rates [illegible] to the company for pumping the water would be taken into consideration. Litigation for taxes on the company's franchise made the payment of 1¾ per cent dividends [illegible] impossible. The company also requests consumers to economize in water as it has only sufficient water to supply a very small proportion of the daily demand and that it will permit but a [illegible] to flow into the city by gravitation.

It is impossible to foretell the serious results likely to happen from the course pursued by the water company. Apart from the probable water famine the danger of great conflagration is imminent. In the stock and bond exchange where Spring Valley stock opened this morning strong at $8[illegible] it closed at $70 50.

The action of the water company causes considerable speculation as to the ultimate results which may or may not be exceedingly serious. In private circles the advisability of the appointment of a committee to appraise the actual value of the company's property for the purpose of condemning it on the ground of urgent public necessity is freely canvassed and meets with many hearty supporters.

Picked up at Sea.

The steamer Tokio which arrived yesterday brought among her passengers five South Sea Islanders who were picked up by the ship Northern Light and taken to Yokohama. They were found afloat in a dying condition in a boat containing [illegible], some five of whom had died from starvation. The rest were so emaciated, especially a woman, that recovery was considered impossible. They stated that they attempted to cross from one island to another when a storm overtook them and drove them to sea out of sight of land. They had nothing to eat but a little pulverized banana and a few gallons of water to drink. The woman gave birth to a boy in the boat which died shortly after. When they were rescued and stepped aboard the ship they fell upon their knees and praised the Almighty for their deliverance. The party will be sent back to Australia, thence to the Fiji islands and from there to the Gilbert islands. At the wharf to-day one of the natives appeared in an old woman's dress parading up and down intently watching the process of unloading.

Probable Cause of the Corwin's Visit.

SAN FRANCISCO, Feb 16.—From a conversation with Capt. Haley, commander of the revenue cutter Corwin, it is learned that he recently received orders from the secretary of the treasury to hold himself in readiness to sail for Oregon on arrival of orders. The vessel accordingly has been prepared for another cruise and is expected to start on Monday next. Though no definite information is received as to the object of the Corwin's visit, it is understood that her mission is to investigate the [illegible] of the lighthouse keeper near Empire City in refusing to allow his life boat launched when the volunteer crew made application for permission to visit the scene of the wreck of the collier Tacoma, with a view to rendering assistance to the shipwrecked crew. As the department has been notified of the presence in the city of the Lighthouse keeper, it is not improbable that some official inquiry will be made into the causes leading to the stranding of the vessel and more minutely into the general nature of the coast in the vicinity of Empire City. Of course in the absence of positive knowledge as to the nature of the instructions the latter is merely a matter of speculation and gathered from statements of custom house officials.

Big Water Scheme.

A water scheme of considerable magnitude is announced by which it is proposed to bring water from the sources of Tuolumne river at the Sierra Nevada mountains by a direct line to San Francisco. Franchises have been obtained for supplying the towns of Stockton, Modesto, Livermore, Oakland, and advances in a similar direction are being made to the supervisors here. The point from where water will be taken is Mount Lyell, 1860 feet above San Francisco level. The watershed drained is 600 miles square and the supply is inexhaustible.

Municipal Employe Arrested.

Charles J. Jackson, late pay roll clerk in the office of superintendent of streets, was arrested this afternoon on six charges of forgery, a reiteration of those upon which the recent arrest of duplicates were based. His bail was set at $12,000 and both of his bondsmen were rejected. The end is not yet, as there are rumors that even the late head of the department will be brought within the pale of the law.

Following the Portland Plan.

A large tract of land in Salinas valley, bordering on the Southern Pacific railroad, was recently purchased by the flour merchants of this city for the purpose of erecting a mill thereon and manufacturing flour on an extensive scale for shipment to Europe. It is said that within a radius of twenty five miles there are not less than eight large grain warehouses projected. The mill will be furnished with the latest improvements and expected to have a capacity of 500 barrels a day.

Personal Mention.

Hon. Rufus Mallory of Salem is at the Palace.

Louis Redon of Victoria is among the recent arrivals.

Senator J. N. Dolph arrived to-day and left for the east on the afternoon train. He was accompanied by ex-Governor A. C. Gibbs.

Against the Lobby.

WASHINGTON, Feb 16.—In the executive session of the senate to-day Edmunds called attention to the alleged abuse of privileges of the floor of the senate by lobbyists and others who through the indulgence of senators had been in the habit of obtaining cards of admission ostensibly as secretaries. With the view to correcting this evil Edmunds introduced the following resolution:

Ordered, That no person be admitted to the floor as a private secretary of a senator until the senator appointing him shall certify in writing to the sergeant-at-arms that he is actually employed for the performance of duties as secretary, and engaged in the performance of the same.

After a brief discussion the resolution was referred to the committee on rules and ordered printed.

The Charges against General Hazen.

WASHINGTON, Feb 16.—In reply to a letter from General Hazen, chief signal officer, asking the secretary of war to request the president of the senate to appoint a committee to investigate the charges made against him by Congressman Beltzhoover, Secretary Lincoln replies denying the request. He says it is not customary for the head of a department to appeal to congress for an investigation of his acts; that it is unusual to call on the senate to investigate charges made in the house; that as a soldier Gen. Hazen need not go outside of the articles of war for a defense or [illegible].

THE MINISTRY.

Reply of the Pacific Christian Advocate to an Article in this Journal.

From the Advocate, 15th inst.

The DAILY OREGONIAN of Feb 13th has an editorial article on the above subject which we have read and re-read with interest. The ministry cannot shut their eyes to the estimate in which as a profession they are held by the intelligent outside world and [illegible] themselves. Whether that estimate is just or unjust, true or false, is not the question. If the view taken by THE OREGONIAN as to the present standing and influence of the ministry is correct, no true man in the ministry would desire to hide it from himself. He has too much at stake personally, and the cause he serves has too much involved to permit him to do so.

The general drift of the article [illegible] is that the ministry has declined and is declining, that it does not enjoy now as aforetime [illegible]

Customary Discussion of Bradlaugh's Seat in the House.

[illegible] LONDON, Feb 15.

Parliament reassembled to-day. [illegible] queen's speech: [illegible] I have [illegible] that we [illegible] maintain friendly [illegible] with all [illegible] powers. [illegible] pleasure of recording my gratitude to my sea and land forces for the suppression rapidly and completely of the military rebellion in Egypt. Tranquility has since been restored there and clemency has been shown by the khedive to the leaders of the rebellion. The withdrawal of British troops progressed as expeditiously as prudent circumstances would permit. The constitution for the government of Egypt and the reorganization of its affairs by the khedive have been partly accomplished and they continue to receive my earnest attention. It shall be my endeavor to secure full provision for the exigencies of order and a just representation of the wants and wishes of the population and for the observance of international obligations. I have already been able to fulfill my promise to the sultan and the powers that I would submit to their friendly consideration arrangements which appeared to me to be fitted to insure the stability of the khedive's government, its prosperity and happiness and peace in eastern Europe. My policy has been and will be directed to these objects. I rely confidently on its just appreciation by other countries. A conference has assembled at London to consider measures for better securing free navigation of the Danube, which is placed under the guarantee of the powers and forms a part of the public law of Europe.

The condition of Zululand and the possibility of renewed disorders there has engaged my most serious attention. With a view to the preservation of peace and order I have provided that the former ruler be placed in possession of a greater part of the territory he held before the war. I earnestly hope this will lead to the establishment of a more stable government and maintenance of the good relations between the Zululand nation and those adjoining. Cape colony papers on these subjects will be presented to you.

The house of commons estimates for services for the coming year is in a forward state of preparation and will shortly be submitted to you.

My lords and gentlemen: I am happy that the improvement in the social condition of Ireland to which I referred in December continues. Agrarian crime is diminished. The law everywhere is upheld. Measures will be promptly submitted for the establishment of a criminal court of appeal, for preventing corrupt practices and perpetual [illegible] and amending the ballot act. You will also be invited to consider a proposal which more effectually secures to the tenants of England and Scotland compensation for agricultural improvements. You have provided during recent years by liberal devotion of your time for the most urgent needs of Ireland. [illegible] general legislation and other parts of the kingdom will demand your just regard. I trust however you will be able to deal with some legislative wants of Ireland for which provision has not yet been made. I rely upon your energy and prudence and beseech the Almighty now as heretofore to bless your labors.

Justin McCarthy, O'Donovan and other members spoke in behalf of Healy.

Trevelyan, chief secretary for Ireland, said that this [illegible] of a serious character [illegible] Ireland. The government is conservative and he [illegible] that the government [illegible] Healy [illegible] Healy's case should be treated [illegible] as that of an English member of parliament would be.

Parnell gave notice that he would introduce a bill amending the land act.

Justin McCarthy gave notice that he would introduce a bill to abolish the Irish vice royalty.

The speaker replying to Newdegate said the resolution of last session against Bradlaugh was not voted on this session.

Marquis of Hartington said it was the business of the house, not the government, to attend to Bradlaugh's voting.

Bradlaugh in his Seat.

LONDON, Feb 15.—About 7000 persons gathered early in Trafalgar square, about one third being somewhat disorderly youths. A hundred policemen were posted at the base of the Nelson monument. The whole square was densely packed, the majority of the crowd cheering Bradlaugh's colors. Bradlaugh's arrival was unexpected and he was not greeted with much enthusiasm. A platform was submitted and resolutions unanimously adopted protesting against the exclusion of Bradlaugh. Order was well maintained. Bradlaugh now entered Westminster hall and was cheered by his supporters and the crowd outside. At 4:10 Bradlaugh was present in his usual seat in the house of commons.

The Alleged Conspirators.

DUBLIN, Feb 16.—In the trial of the [illegible] conspirators yesterday among the witnesses was Mrs. Sharp, who notwithstanding the rumors concerning her evidence merely deposed seeing the corpses. Meagle identified Brady and Fagan but was not sure as to Fagan. He said he [illegible] the scuffling men he saw four others enter the cab and drive away furiously. His health [illegible] but the witness is [illegible]. Meagle admitted that neither he nor his companion [illegible] what they saw until the Monday following.

Constable [illegible] at McNiece's [illegible] works deposed [illegible]. He saw Brady and Kelly in [illegible] loitering around the Viceregal lodge at [illegible] the morning. Witness admitted on cross examination that he had [illegible] the prison [illegible] the press only will be admitted to-morrow.

THE FLOODS.

[illegible] the Former [illegible] Ohio River Rising Very Slowly [illegible] Contributions.

[illegible]

Generous Contributions.

[illegible] relief [illegible] from [illegible] New York [illegible] from New Orleans or over $10,000 was added to the relief fund to-day which now amounts to $[illegible]. The [illegible] relief association received a consignment of boats from Cleveland. We expect a life saving crew with boats [illegible] to be used in Newport. Another consignment of boats is on the way from Sandusky. Until the water leaves the streets all will be needed to convey food at [illegible]. The Masonic committee received dispatches tendering assistance from parties in Springfield, Urbana, Lima, Sandusky and Cleveland. The reunion of the Ancient and Accepted Order of Scottish Rite Masons appointed for February 20th, 21st and 22d has been postponed until March 13th, 14th and 15th.

Mutual Aid.

The first drowning from boats occurred to-day. Two boys in a frail boat gathering drift wood in the northwestern part of the city fell overboard and were drowned. Skiffs to-day crossed the river [illegible] and one or two small steamers carried loads of sight seers up and down between the Newport bridge and [illegible] suspension bridge. That part of Dayton, Ky., is nine-tenths under water. The people abolished the practice of paying for boating services. If any one demands pay for carrying people or provisions [illegible] his boat is confiscated. In Columbia and other smaller suburbs the people devote their whole time to assisting each other. In many houses the [illegible] invalid parlors and pianos were swung to the ceiling. The disturbance of railroads affects the distribution of newspapers at a time when they are most in demand.

More Loss Feared at Louisville.

LOUISVILLE, Feb 16.—The situation is probably more dangerous than at any other time. The back water is coming through sewers in many places, rising at the rate of over a foot an hour. It is believed however, that the river will be falling by to-morrow. The Galt house basement is flooded. River men predict higher water. Clouds are gathering, and it will probably rain before night. Fires under water works boilers were extinguished. Fortunately there is twenty days supply in the reservoir. A few more inches will drown out the gas works and throw the city in darkness. Houses are continually shifting and tumbling about in the swift current. Fifteen houses went over the falls. There is much sickness already, as a result of the flood, and it will be worse after the flood subsides. Bear Grass creek burst its bounds to-day, adding $100,000 to the damage of millions already suffered.

About at its Height.

LOUISVILLE, Feb 16.—The river reached the highest point, 44 feet 5 inches, 33 inches higher than the flood of 1832. It will probably raise slowly till night, when it is hoped receding will begin. There have been no casualties or additional damage to property. Heavy contributions are pouring in at the depots of supply. No suffering for food or clothing. The weather is clear and warm.

Portland Abandoned.

LOUISVILLE, Feb 16.—The people of Portland are driven out of the second stories. The shipping port is entirely abandoned and houses are floating away. Three men were rescued as they floated down to-day clinging to the roof of a shed. The body of a woman with a child clasped in her arms was recovered from the water.

Flood in the Wabash Feared.

INDIANAPOLIS, Feb 16.—Appeals for help come from Jeffersonville and New Albany. Supplies have been sent, some of which are already received. The governor, auditor and secretary of state have been appointed a committee to disburse the fund appropriated by the legislature. Reports from Lafayette, Peru, and other points say the Wabash is rising rapidly, overflowing the banks, and serious damage from ice and flood is feared.

Rise Expected at Pittsburg.

PITTSBURG, Feb 16.—Both rivers continue to rise. The Monongahela is now 11½ feet and the Allegheny 9½. In the Allegheny valley the [illegible] stopped this morning, and it is now clear. It is still raining at headwaters and the river is rising rapidly. Twenty five feet is expected here before the flood reaches its height. No damage apprehended except from submersion.

Help from Cleveland.

CLEVELAND, Feb 16.—The Masonic fraternity here sent to Cincinnati eleven skiffs last night, a life-saving crew of eight men who volunteered, and a large life-boat this afternoon, and to-morrow will send if needed five large yawls with one expert to man each. Cuyahoga river is falling and danger of a destructive freshet is believed to be past.

Flood Notes.

MADISON, Ind. Feb 16.—The flood is at its worst.

MILTON, Ky., Feb 16.—Every house but one is submerged. Everybody sick.

LOUISVILLE, Ky., Feb 16.—The river is 44 feet 2 inches in the canal and is rising slowly. It is cloudy and very warm.

WABASH, Feb 16.—Much live stock and growing wheat was destroyed by the floods in this section. Total damage during the past ten days $100,000.

CINCINNATI, Feb 16.—Special provisions are going up at a frightful rate. Starvation prices are being charged by many dealers.

LOUISVILLE, Feb 16.—Damage to the three Falls cities is $3,000,000.

Less Threatening.

CINCINNATI, Feb 16.—The prospect of rain is less threatening. At 11 A. M. the river stood 64 feet 4½ inches.

The life saving crew from Cleveland is distributing provisions. Newport Odd Fellows are relieving their members.

CINCINNATI, Feb 16—1:30 P. M.—The water is 64 feet [illegible]. Daniel Morgan & Co. telegraphed $5000 this afternoon.

Comparison with the European Floods.

NEW YORK, Feb 16.—Murat Halstead, editor of the Commercial Gazette of Cincinnati, telegraphs to Wm. Henry Hurlbut, editor of the World, that the end of the flood has been measured and that the waters are bound to subside from now on unless [illegible] rain. [illegible] the remarkable similarity between the flood of the Ohio river and that [illegible] the Rhine and Danube.

A Remedy Suggested.

General McClellan in an interview says as a preventive against floods the nation must enact laws [illegible] the replanting of forests cut off.

Receding Slightly.

[illegible], Feb 16.—The water is receding [illegible] an inch and a half [illegible]. At [illegible] the water was 46 feet 8 inches [illegible] above the highest [illegible] flood [illegible]. A brisk wind is [illegible] are liable to sink. New rains would bring disaster. Two hundred houses are overturned.

In Lawrenceburg [illegible] 4000 persons are homeless. Loss $500,000. Generous relief is [illegible] them, and [illegible] no loss of life, but many narrow escapes. [illegible] four hundred people are quartered there.

Still Rising at New Albany.

NEW ALBANY, Ind., Feb 16.—The river is rising slowly, [illegible] an inch an hour. [illegible] inches last night. One hundred houses are gone and 800 are in the water. Five thousand people are homeless [illegible] and it may be greater. Congressional [illegible] have been appealed to [illegible] but there has been no loss of life. The water is nearly the [illegible] of the famous flood of 1832.

Floods in the South.

MEMPHIS, Feb 16.—The river is within 2 feet 7 inches of the danger line, rising 10 inches a day. Will go over the banks below. Planters are preparing for trouble. Railroads all right.

SATURDAY MORNING, FEB. 17, 188[illegible]

SOME HOMELY TRUTHS.

It is repeating an old song to say that one of the great mistakes which they [illegible] country make, is supporting the [illegible] and overcrowding the professions. [illegible] dency is limited to no special locality. [illegible] as well as in the densely populated east there is a general disposition to get [illegible] life and become so called professional men. If a profession is not desired or cannot be had a clerkship or some other genteel employment is the object of young and [illegible]. The [illegible] for office which so disgraces our [illegible] is an outgrowth of this tendency to avoid manual labor and to seek a living by a supposed easier way. What is the reason for this? Almost every young man has ambition to get along in the world. He wants to be something and to make a fortune. He is not lazy and is willing to work. We fail, therefore, to find the tendency to shun the trades in any dislike for work or bodily exertion, for the professions—those who follow with zeal and diligence which are indispensable to success, must endure "more weariness of the flesh," must overcome more obstacles and work harder twice over than does the mechanic. Even the clerk must work harder and for poorer pay than does half the workmen in trades. The chances of success in either mercantile or professional life are not so great as in the trades. Only five per cent. of merchants succeed, and the pathway of professional life is strewn thick with lives worn out by expectance, toil and failure. The craftsman is bound to achieve partial success and without the nervous heartburnings, longings and despair that cut short the lives of so many professional men. The reason, therefore must come not from natural causes, but from causes of our own creation—a false measure of worth and respectability and false education. The reformer who can instill into the minds of the boys who are just starting out in life the notion that a good mechanic is better than a poor professional man, more contented with himself and more useful to the world, will have made much progress toward removing one of the burdens of society, the drones who bring up the sorry looking rear of the procession of professional life. But there are no such reformers. Even parents have false ideas in life. They are often responsible for making their boys fools. The fond mother, silly but ambitious, wishes to see her somewhat mentally heavy boy stand in the pulpit, plead before judges or toy with human life, because she thinks so-called respectability should come before usefulness or success in life. A successful man seldom leaves any posterity—at least we never hear of them. Such a man has won the world's respectability and cannot afford to compromise it by making his dull son learn a trade. Of course a dull boy will amount to nothing at any rate, but he had better be a bad blacksmith than a bad doctor. It would be more pleasant to all concerned. Next is our false education. In the apprentice system of England and Germany the most of the superintendents and foremen of largest and most noted mills and manufactories had their training, and they have found their way to this country and into those prominent and lucrative places, because the American youths have been prone to regard the pursuit of that knowledge and skill requisite to fill such places as more unworthy than securing a place in the overcrowded and half done professions.

And for this condition of things our school system is to a great extent responsible. Nearly every boy who comes from high school or college has more conceit than sense. The fresh graduate, as a rule, thinks himself prepared for leading the world's thoughts, and sneers at the baker and the candle stick maker. This comes from our schools imparting too little of the sort of learning which the boy will need in after life. Every kind of learning which is not bad is good, but that is best that can be made the most useful, and this should not be neglected for that which is ornamental. When our schools turn out boys as willing and as well prepared to become mechanics as to become doctors and lawyers, a greater degree of excellence will have been attained by them than they have yet reached, and the overcrowded condition of the walks of professional life by inferior members will become a thing of the past, and the world will be much the better for it.

SUNDAY LAWS.

The legislatures of three states are discussing Sunday laws, more or less stringent. While the proposed legislation is strongly urged by zealous advocates, in the three instances, it is opposed in every instance by a calm majority and will undoubtedly fail. There is no disputing the fact that ours is a Christian civilization, and that Christians observe one day out of seven—Sunday—as a day of rest and religious worship. They do not wish this order of things to be rudely molested or interfered with, and, as they are largely in the majority, they have the right to defend themselves authoritatively, by placing such checks upon the secularization and desecration of the day as they think will prove effectual so far as their own rights and privileges are concerned. But the constitution is above even the majority, and the constitution commands equal rights for all citizens. The free-thinker, the Jew, the irreligious, are forbidden by the constitution to molest the Christian majority in the exercise of their religious rights and peculiar use of the day, but in the same breath the constitution forbids the Christian or any other majority from interfering with the rights and privileges of those who differ from them in their views of the day, provided there be no practical invasion of their own rights. The Texas senate has concluded, as all impassionate people must conclude, that Sunday laws must be based on a compromise. It is competent for the state to recognize the policy of establishing a recurring day of rest, on physiological and economical grounds, and it is competent for the legislature to select for that day, the one revered from immemorial times by their own ancestors; and also to establish such police regulations, etc., in reference to the observance of that day as may secure the free enjoyment of it by those who use it religiously, without any tyrannical oppression of those who use it simply as a day of rest and recreation. In a case like this, public sentiment and opinion will prevail. If the austere observance of the Sabbath, copied from the old Mosaic institution by the Puritans, be on the rise, and is supported by the shoulders of the many and the spirit of the times—then all opposition is fruitless, and by degrees we will approach the enforced grimness of old Geneva or blue law Connecticut. But if it be otherwise, and the spirit that shapes the grade be a liberal rather than an æsthetic one—then all hasty, partial and restrictive laws on the subject are worse than nothing. They irritate the people and provoke escapades that naturally would not occur. Nothing is, per se, more hateful to the people at large than a sumptuary law. Make a man eat mutton on Tuesday by law, and he will hate mutton and damn the law. And he would be perfectly right in being indignant. Law has no normal reach over such matters.

The full returns of the last census show that there are in France 37,405,290 inhabitants, of which 18,656,518 are males and 18,748,772 females. It will thus be seen that the female sex is the stronger in numbers by 92,2[illegible]. Of the males, 10,110,01[illegible] are unmarried, 7,[illegible] married, 1,925,7[illegible] widowers, while of the females, 9,281,862 are unmarried, 7,[illegible] married and 1,064,557 widows. Agriculture employs no fewer than 19,104,[illegible]00 persons, or nearly one-half of the entire population. Next come the manufactures, which find employment for 2,398,157 pairs of hands and then commerce, which employs 3,[illegible]117. Persons of independent means number 2,143,473 and the liberal professions support 1,[illegible] persons.

Senator Edmunds [illegible] of a postal telegraph [illegible] to the purchase of any [illegible] the postal [illegible] Senator Edmunds [illegible] of the [illegible] the people [illegible] existing [illegible] to the scheme [illegible]

Governor Butler of Massachusetts has been expressing in a letter to Susan B. Anthony a [illegible] view of the woman suffrage question.

As I have already expressed [illegible] all persons to vote, and as I assert [illegible] of the country are persons [illegible] I think that such would be the decision of the court, perhaps quite as early as you may be able to get the [illegible] of the several states [illegible] both lines of action may well be followed, as they do not conflict with each other.

The proper thing for Miss [illegible] to do now is to make a test case, and get Governor Butler to handle it in the supreme court.

The currents at the mouth of the Columbia are now favorable for the opening of the middle channel. Unusually large deposits of sand have been made close to either side of the entrance, and these it is hoped will hold their place for some months to come. In the present condition of the bar the dragging of fish nets across it would be specially unfortunate. We call attention to these facts because the fishing season will begin before a great while, and that the proper officers may be on guard to enforce the law passed at the last session of the legislature.

An attempt on the part of one member of the California legislature to kill another in a groggery where they and other members were gambling during the small hours of the night, is reported from Sacramento. A fine lot, and a high toned spectacle.

The "Liberal League" has indiscreetly taken up the cause of Rev. Heber Newton. This, of course, puts Newton in the attitude of a backslider and an enemy to the church, and destroys the interest of his position.

Reredell, one of the star route rogues, confesses his guilt and will be used as a witness against his associates. This is a great point gained in the prosecution.

All the legislatures now in session are wrestling with the railroad problem.

UNIVERSITY CITY.

EUGENE, Feb. 15.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE OREGONIAN:

This town is favored with a site of extraordinary beauty. It is located in an amphitheater bounded by mountains that cut the clear atmosphere with a horizon of every outline. The broad area thus enclosed is a fertile plain, interspersed with conical hills and peaks that are pyramidal, all crowned with vegetation, which on the distant ranges bristles in lofty fir trees. The Willamette river flows along the margin of the city, adding greatly to the charms of the landscape.

The most conspicuous edifice in the town is the university, a brick building, which provides rooms for recitations, cabinets and library. The students find accommodations in the homes of the citizens. A donation of fifty thousand dollars, made by Mr. Villard, who had previously given several thousands, has placed this institution upon a permanent foundation. To this has been added a state tax of one-tenth of a mill. These resources together, with tuition, fees and interest on the endowment previously invested, make up the income of the college. This is barely equal to expenses now accruing, and with the increase of students will be inadequate. Indeed another building, on an extensive plan, is now almost indispensable.

It would be very difficult to find any equitable authority for taxing the state to found or support any literary institution exclusively. If taxed at all for higher education it should aid competent and well-ordered institutions in different parts of the state—the distribution to be regulated upon an impartial basis, as has been successfully done in some other states. There is no occasion for the state to practice partiality in supporting any single institution of learning. The endowment would come from the affluent citizens, and in sufficient contributions, if the state would forbear to obtrude upon a province which does not belong to her. Cases of this kind in the older states are numerous.

Our state university is discharging its functions in a creditable manner. Your correspondent has unusual facilities for forming a sound opinion on this subject, and it is due to all parties concerned to express it. Its faculty is composed of the following gentlemen: J. W. Johnson, Mark Bailey, Thos. Condon, George H. Collier, John Straub, C. A. Lambert. The preparatory department is under the care of Mrs. M. P. Spiller. The regents also selected two tutors—Miss Lizzie Geary, a graduate of Mills seminary, the best endowed and appointed institution on this coast; and Mr. Emery E. Burke, a graduate of this university.

No part of the Willamette valley is more beautiful or fertile than that in which Eugene is situated. The wheat garden of Lane county blooms around it. These lands, exuberant in fertility, are beginning to rebel against abuse. Year after year, for the lifetime of a generation, the staple wheat toll has been exacted, and now the prodigate tillers are being compelled to introduce a more intelligent and varied tillage. The fertility is not exhausted, but the constituents of wheat in the soil. A rotation of crops is absolutely demanded. Deeper plowing gives only temporary relief. Drainage will be a permanent benefit, but a wise husbandry alone can restore the vigor and fecundity of nature.

Your correspondent met J. G. Gray, treasurer of Lane county, who had just made up the annual tax due the state, amounting to $20,000.

Nature has made a remarkable provision for supplying this town with water. The peak which separates it from the river is so formed that upon its sides or summit a reservoir can be constructed at an elevation far above the loftiest buildings; and the force will be sufficient to direct the water in case of fire without the interposition of engines or any other mechanical aid. The supply of water can be pumped up from the river by machinery impelled by its own current. The entire expense will be reduced to a point below the cheapest methods of supplying this indispensable fluid. The bountiful supply thus provided will make Eugene a perfect garden. It is not lacking in horticultural taste. Many of its homes are embosomed in shade and adorned with shrubbery.

The business of this city is increasing. Thirty car loads of flour are now awaiting transportation at the Eugene City mills. The company which owns this fine property is composed of Messrs. Patterson, Gray, Edris and Swift. A furniture manufactory has been established. A traveler passing through the business streets of Eugene is favorably impressed with the fine assortments of goods exposed for sale, and with the general air of activity. Among leading merchants are Messrs. F. B. Dunn, S. H. Friendly, T. G. Hendricks, J. H. McClung, A. V. Peters, G. Bettman, Chas. Lauer. Hovey & Humphrey are bankers.

At this season, as might be expected, the town is quiet. The daily arrival and departure of the train furnish an agreeable diversion to the citizens, and gentlemen of leisure seize the opportunity to air themselves, and the ladies share in the general exhilaration. There is a zest about a railroad station in the rural districts never tasted in cities. Many a greeting is exchanged, items of news communicated, business transacted,—and altogether there is an interesting manifestation of our social life on such occasions.

The event of the past week was the dedication of the house of worship erected by the Presbyterians. The building provides a lecture room, study, and class room in the basement, which, however, is all above ground. Over these extends the auditorium, capable of seating 300 persons. It is finished in good style at a cost of $465[illegible]. It is very creditable to the citizens of Eugene that nearly three-quarters of this sum was contributed by them. At the dedication the church was crowded, and a large number were obliged to stand during the services. The clergymen of the city participated. The sermon was preached by Rev. A. L. Lindsley, D. D., of Portland, and the solemn act of dedication was pronounced by the pastor, Rev. E. R. Geary, D. D. In the historical sketch, Dr. Geary paid a deserved tribute to the citizens and church members who had contributed to the erection fund; nor were the ladies forgotten, without whose efficient help the building could not have been furnished. Messrs. Wm. Edris, S. B. Eakin and W. McCornac are the building committee; the elders of the congregation are, Messrs. Alfred Flowell, Calvin Hanes, John Straub and Robert Patrick. After the sketch, congratulatory addresses were made by Rev. Messrs. Parsons, Woolley, McLafferty and Condon. A special choir was organized for this occasion under the leadership of L. G. Adair, Esq.; Prof. Gunn presiding at the organ.

This event is worthy of notice as an illustration of the public spirit displayed by one of our interior towns; the whole property being set apart to its sacred use entirely free from debt. Dr. Geary, in a [illegible] spirit and with eloquent utterance, expressed the gratitude of [illegible] friends in Portland by whose [illegible] was [illegible]

PROTECTION OR RIGHTS.

Under this mighty purpose of self preservation they allowed no half measures. They listened to no special pleas for fancied rights. They knew no rights so sacred as that of the nation to exist which assured their own existence. They knew no doctrine so false as that of citizens who claimed to have personal rights to injure and destroy the government which gave them shelter and safety. They knew no crime so base as that of making gain out of the ruin of the commonwealth. The fall of the republic was to the American people more terrible than the conquest of half the states amid the throes of civil war and the slaughter of a half million patriots. Their resolution once taken, to protect and save this republic, at whatever cost and sacrifice, no earthly power seemed able to withstand them. They seized the forts and fortresses of the enemy by whatever means. They met the foe on every field. They carried the war into his camp, divided his armies, dried up his resources and gave no quarter until he lay down his arms and ceased his warfare upon the republic. After peace and safety the people pardoned their mistaken foes.

Let such a menace to the welfare of this nation come from intemperance and its abettors; let it be clearly seen that it sets the personal rights of the few against the welfare of the many; let it be felt that intemperance assails the public good in its finances, in its citizenship, in its homes, in the habits of youth, in its municipal affairs, in the integrity of its laws, and in its public faith and moral worthiness, and all questions of method will merge into the one question of self-protection. The thin veil of personal rights will be torn off, and the magna charta of freedom from tyranny will be unfurled. The rallying cry will be, protect the millions; protect the families of the people; protect the youth; protect the law; protect morality; protect the widow and the fatherless; protect the sacred name of justice; protect humanity; protect man from making himself a brute, protect the tempted and put away the tempter forever.

METHODS.

The dangers suggest the means of safety. The instinctive logic of self preservation is to seize any and every means to do it. When your house is on fire, you put it out. You stop for no other care or business. This is the supreme duty. When life is in peril, you bend every energy for its safety. When the life of the family, the community or of this republic is seen and felt to be assailed and imperiled by the traffic and common use of alcoholic beverages, means will be found to rescue home, society and nation from the destroyer.

Nothing will seem more base than to make money out of the poverty and misery and despair and death of a neighbor or his household. No crime will seem blacker than to destroy for gain the well being of a village or city or state or nation. The supreme duty of the hour will then be to seize the foe and crush his business. His rights as against the rights of the people will be mere brushwood to be piled up and burned.

Prove that the whisky traffic logically demands either a monopoly or the same freedom as the bread traffic; that it pays a license fee and a revenue tax under protest that its aim is universal freedom and unlimited power; prove that all its fruits are evil; prove that it attacks the property, the industry, the health, the education, the morals, the peace, the good order and the sacred laws of the people, and tramples them under foot when disliked, as the Sabbath law; prove that its influence is like the plague, breeding the corruption of society which has given it shelter; prove that its forces are organized, marshaled, drilled, fortified, choosing the salient points in every village and city of the land, in every port and on a thousand ships, making attack everywhere day and night, sure every one to slay his man and desolate some fair home; prove that this vast hostile army consigns 60,000 to the grave annually and takes $700,000,000 over the counter yearly, for which it gives back only misery and despair; prove all these facts and more like them, and you will frame an indictment so terrible that no man, no combination and no arguments can withstand under its tremendous force an injured, long suffering but indignant public will rise in their majesty, as once before, with intense resolve to stop this destroyer and bury his traffic too deep for resurrection.

THE PRESS.

A vigilant daily press hangs out the signals. Faithful watchmen of the public weal, they give instant reports of evils which menace the commonwealth as well as the forces and events which promote its well-being. True journalism has been a right arm of the republic from its earliest history. In the warfare against gigantic evils it may in all the future be relied upon to do the most effective service. It will gather the facts, collate the evidence, arouse the careless, instruct and warn friends, expose and withstand enemies. In the late civil war, the great journals were an essential factor of the national integrity and of its final victory. In future perils and conflicts, with the forces of intemperance, while methods may vary, the intelligent press will be found a unit for the protection of society against this foe, whom its own utterances must expose. It will be found also that the social compact knows no right so sacred as self-preservation, and no higher law than that which compels every citizen to abide by its compact.

WOMAN SUFFRAGE CONVENTION.

Fourth Day—Morning Session.

Meeting called to order at 10:30 A. M. by President.

The secretary then read the Treasurer's report, which was as follows:

Receipts	$74 25
Expenses	52 00
Balance on hand	$22 25

Mrs. Duniway moved that an order be drawn on Treasurer for the sum of $4.50, the amount named in the report, to meet the expenses of the Association. Carried, and the Secretary instructed to draw warrant.

A resolution was adopted thanking the Portland press for reports, Rev. Dr. Martin, Judge B. F. Dennison, Dr. W. F. West and Rev. J. A. Gray and G. J. McDougall Esq., for lectures, Prof. Donaldson, Mrs. H. W. Scott and others for music, Judge Stott and Sheriff Sears for use of court room, to Himes the printer for reduction in printing, to the janitor for services rendered, and the various transportation companies for reduction over their lines of travel.

Mrs. Davenport suggested that sub committees be appointed in every locality to solicit subscriptions and hold entertainments for the purpose of swelling the campaign fund.

Mrs. Loughary thought that clubs should be organized everywhere for the purpose.

Convention then adjourned sine die.

LIVER, KIDNEY AND BRIGHT'S DISEASE.

A medicine that destroys the germ or cause of Bright's Disease, Diabetes, Kidney and Liver Complaints, and has power to root them out of the system, is above all price. Such a medicine is Hop Bitters, and positive proof of this can be found by one trial, or by asking your neighbors who have been cured by it.

SATURDAY MORNING, FEB. 17, 1883.

CITY.

Sent to [illegible].—Thomas [illegible], Dave Connelly and Nick [illegible] were [illegible] for examination yesterday [illegible] charged by Mrs. Grant [illegible] Green [illegible] house keeper with obtaining [illegible] pretenses. The three men have boarded [illegible] Mrs. Grant and [illegible] vanced money, board, [illegible] which she holds [illegible] shipping master, Mr. [illegible] ordered when the sailors are [illegible] ready to sail. These sailors had [illegible] the captain of the [illegible] yesterday, and on the strength [illegible] ship, Mrs. Grant allowed them [illegible] the amount claimed. [illegible] they signed false names to the [illegible] Davis signed the name by which [illegible] the ship was ready to leave [illegible] them refused to go in her, and [illegible] means to settle with their landlady, hence their arrest. These facts were brought out [illegible] tion, and the court considered them sufficiently strong to warrant the holding all three [illegible] action of the grand jury under [illegible] bonds each, in default of which they were sent to the county jail.

Serious Charge.—John Epperly was arraigned before Justice Davis yesterday on a charge of obtaining property under false pretenses, and was held to answer in the sum of [illegible]. The charge is that but a few days before the [illegible] concern in which Epperly was [illegible] failed, this man went to the carriage factory of [illegible] Bradley, on Fourth street, and purchased a buggy [illegible] worth $175, and paid for the same with a note of H. Cardwell for $150, saying that the same was good, when he knew at the time that Cardwell was insolvent. A short time after Cardwell failed. The buggy is now gone, and it said the note is little better than worthless. Mr. Epperly states that when he sold out to Cardwell he received payment partly in cash and partly in promissory notes. He negotiated the note with Bradley without recourse, and Bradley said he would see Cardwell about the matter, and after doing so accepted it in payment for the buggy on those terms. Shortly after Cardwell failed, and it is now attempted to fasten a criminal charge on him. He denies any attempt to defraud, and says the transaction was a plain business one, in which there was no attempt to deceive.

Particulars of the Ainsworth Shooting.—The Walla Walla Statesman of the 13th inst. contains full particulars of the shooting. [illegible] Frank C. Hammond, time-keeper for the bridge [illegible] at Ainsworth, of H. R. Grinnell, Wells, Fargo & Co.'s agent. For some time there has existed bad feeling between the parties, caused by a discrepancy in the amount of time claimed by Grinnell and that allowed him by Hammond. Both parties were at supper when [illegible] words passed and Hammond attempted to draw a revolver. Grinnell caught him by the throat, forcing him against the wall. He then left the restaurant, meeting again at [illegible] & Keith's where more words passed. Grinnell struck Hammond, who drew his revolver and fired, bystanders interfering before a second shot was fired. The ball entered just below the navel and passed out above the left hip, causing great pain until the sufferer was placed under the influence of morphine. He died at 5 o'clock on the morning of the 10th, having received his wound on the evening of the 8th.

For the Penitentiary.—James Frazier, sentenced to three years prison life at Salem for robbing Wm. Doherty in the "Red Light" saloon, was taken up yesterday by Deputy Sheriff C. F. Powell. He welcomed the hand-cuffs and irons, and said he was glad to go. Jailer Doherty was glad to have him go, as he has all along been regarded as a very desperate man, who would not hesitate to take any chance for escape. This morning Sheriff Sears will also go up to Salem in charge of the convicted forger C. J. Murphy, whose sentence is ten years. The other four indictments found by the grand jury against him were yesterday dismissed by Judge [illegible] in the state circuit court, upon motion of District Attorney Caples, the latter deeming Murphy's punishment already sufficiently severe and not wishing to put the county to the heavy expense of four more trials.

[illegible].—A number of lads residing in the vicinity of North [illegible] and C street managed to derive considerable sport from a valentine on Wednesday evening. They secured a large, fine looking envelope, in which they placed the alleged [illegible] missive. To this they attached a long string and then placed it on the threshold of a gentleman's residence and rang the bells. When the ring was answered and the person appearing at the door attempted to pick up the valentine it mysteriously rolled away [illegible] the street to the great surprise of the person [illegible]. This scheme was repeated several times, till at length a person was come across who could not or would not see the joke, and rushed out into the street and hurled rocks after the juvenile jokers till they were glad to escape with their lives and the loss of their valentine.

[illegible].—An agreed statement of facts in the case of the United States vs. Wm. [illegible], sheriff of Umatilla county, having been submitted to the court, the case came up for trial yesterday before Judge Deady, without a jury. Hon. J. F. Watson, United States district attorney, appeared in behalf of the government, and Messrs. W. Lair Hill, W. T. Thompson and State District Attorney [illegible], of the sixth district, appeared for Mr. [illegible]. After hearing the arguments Judge Deady took the matter under advisement till next term of court, which commences on the second Monday in April, at which time Judge Sawyer will be here to confer with him in regard to the decision. The case is one of considerable interest, as it involves many points which have never been passed on by the supreme court of the United States.

Burglary.—The family of [illegible] Gibson, residing on [illegible], was awakened about 3 o'clock yesterday morning by an unusual noise, and upon investigating the cause a strange man was found exploring the house. Mrs. Gibson rushed out into the street and called for the police, and officers Belcher and [illegible] were soon at hand. On entering the house they found Mr. Gibson holding the intruder down by the throat, while another man stood over him with a club. The prisoner, who gave the name of Johnson, was taken to the city jail. He claims that he got into the house by mistake, which does not look at all reasonable, as he had removed his shoes and entered through a window. He will have an examination to-day.

[illegible] the Front.—Dr. Philip Harvey, chief surgeon of the N. P. railroad, who has been located at Thompson's river, Montana, for some months, returned to this city yesterday. He was five days making the trip, owing to failures in making connections. He has been living in a canvas tent, with the thermometer forty degrees below zero. Wolves and deer, he states, are plentiful in that region. The locomotive ran over and killed a [illegible] on his trip down. The excessive cold weather brought on an asthmatic affection which caused the doctor's return to this milder climate for a season.

[illegible].—The steamship Columbia arrived at the mouth of the Willamette about 5:30 [illegible] morning, but was forced to anchor below [illegible] on account of the ship Young America being [illegible] across the channel there. The steamer [illegible] Thompson went down and brought up the mails, passengers and express, arriving here about [illegible]. The steamer going down will not be able to [illegible] till the ship floats off which will probably be at high water to-day.

Election of Officers.—At the annual meeting of the Portland Bar Association, held at its rooms, Nos. 60 and 61 Union block, yesterday evening, the following officers were elected for the ensuing year: President, Judge Wm. Strong; first vice president, John Catlin; second vice president, H. H. Northup; secretary, M. W. Smith; corresponding secretary, W. M. Gregory; treasurer, E. B. Hughes; directors, [illegible] D. P. Bellinger, J. R. Woodward and Seneca Smith.

"Woman's Work."—The Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Portland will hold a meeting in the Taylor-street Methodist church to-morrow evening at 7:30 o'clock. The meeting will be presided over by the president of the "Union," Mrs. Annie [illegible], who will deliver an address. A paper on "Woman's Work" will be presented by Mrs. J. C. [illegible], and speeches by Mrs. H. K. Hines and [illegible] W. Lee, with interesting music.

Out of Service.—The steamers Wide West, Dixie Thompson, Champion and Hassalo, and the barges [illegible] and Wyatchie are lying at the lower boneyard. They have all been overhauled and put in thorough repair for the approaching busy season. The [illegible] is undergoing extensive repairs which will make her about as good as new. The West is having a change made in her guards and will hereafter have four.

Fire Escapes.—Multnomah block, at the corner of [illegible] and Fifth streets has been furnished with fire escapes in the shape of ladders with iron [illegible] fastened to the south side of the building, one [illegible] and the other near the west end. They are accessible from the second and third stories and will be found very effective in case of fire in the building. There are many other buildings which should be similarly furnished.

Bear on Bear Meat.—Butchers are worrying themselves over the problem of obtaining supplies of meat for their customers. If one kind of meat cannot be obtained another must and O'Shea Brothers are not going to be left, so James took his gun and went out and shot a young bear. The fat carcass of the little fellow was on exhibition at their stall in New Market yesterday and was quickly disposed of.

Change in Officials.—H. [illegible] Fairweather, superintendent of the Pend d'Oreille division of the Northern Pacific railroad, has resigned, and F. F. Griffin has been appointed to the vacancy. Mr. Griffin was formerly superintendent of the Black Hills division, and is a man of twenty-two years' experience in railroading. The many friends of Mr. Fairweather on this coast will regret his resignation.

New Buildings.—A block of residences is building on the corner of Seventh and Taylor streets, which will cost, when completed, $14,000. The block is the property of Mr. [illegible]. Two three-story brick building on No. [illegible] First street, near the corner of [illegible], being erected by Mrs. [illegible], is nearly completed. The lower floor is divided into stores and the two upper floors are arranged for offices and rooms for housekeeping and lodging.

Delegates Appointed.—The following delegates have been appointed from the [illegible] Taylor street M. E. church to the state Temperance Alliance, to be held at Albany [illegible] F. P. Berry, James [illegible], [illegible] Harriet Campbell, Mrs. Catherine [illegible], and Miss Mary Sutherland. [illegible]

[illegible].—[illegible] in Wells, Fargo & Co.'s [illegible] week ending yesterday: [illegible] Clark, Miss Emma [illegible], [illegible] Dawson, [illegible] Miss Edith [illegible], Miss W. C. Wells.

New Roof.—The shingle roof [illegible] dock being about worn out it has been [illegible] by the O. R. & N. company to replace it with corrugated iron. This will entail [illegible] expense, the roof containing about [illegible] and afford great protection to the property in case of fires in the vicinity.

Calliopean's Cantata.—Masonic hall was filled with people last evening to hear the youthful members of the Portland Band of Hope in the entertainment which they had prepared for their parents and friends. All present were certainly well pleased and as the [illegible] through the hall [illegible] their own life was [illegible]. [illegible]

Disappointed.—[illegible] Wolfe [illegible] disappeared [illegible]

Suit for Damages.—The case of Martin [illegible] against the O. R. & N. Co., for damages claimed on account of [illegible] received while in the hospital after an accident was tried in the state circuit court yesterday before a jury. The defendant was bound [illegible] [illegible] till 9 a. m. this morning.

[illegible].—Judge [illegible] yesterday [illegible] the [illegible] in reference to the Balch claim, which has been under advisement for about a year and a half. It was decided that the proceeding being a suit, in equity to quiet title, the proper remedy would be by an action at law. Hence he dismissed the bill without prejudice.

A YOUTHFUL BORGIA.

Lottie Price, only Ten Years Old, Attempts to Fatally Poison Mrs. Shields, her Benefactress, in Wasco County.

Sheriff Sears of Multnomah county, last night received a letter from Sheriff Storrs, of Wasco county, which told a story of crime so strange and unnatural that had it come from any but so reliable and official a source it could scarcely have been credited. The horrible history of that family of poisoners, the Borgias, is from its very depth of wickedness, familiar to nearly every one. But in these modern times, to read of a human being possessed of a mania for poisoning any living thing or person, without even the criminal purpose of a desire for power or revenge such as influenced the dark deeds of the Borgias, it is frightful, and one stands aghast with horror. Yet, a mere girl, ten years of age, a former inmate of the Home in this city, taken thence to the bosom of a kind family, has developed just such a terrible mania, and administered almost a fatal dose of strychnine to her benefactress, the woman who had pitied her, cared for her and given her a home, warming the viper upon her breast only to be stung almost to the death. Such are the facts shown in the letter mentioned above, which read as follows:

THE DALLES, Feb. 15, 1883.

George C. Sears, sheriff:

About nine months ago Mrs. E. Shields, of Wasco, took from the Home a girl, Lottie Price, about 10 years of age, the daughter of George Price. Last Monday she poisoned Mrs. Shields by strychnine, not, however, fatally. Before this the girl had poisoned all the dogs on the place. Mrs. Shields does not like to take legal proceedings against her, but wishes you to go to Mrs. Woods, the matron of the Home, and see that she does not get back there. If she does, it is feared she will poison all the children in the Home. She will be down on the morning train.

J. T. STORRS.
Sheriff Wasco county.

Beyond this letter Sheriff Sears has no information in regard to the girl. Whether she came to the city yesterday morning, or is coming this morning, is a little uncertain from the wording of the letter. There being no legal proceedings instituted against her, the authorities here could not arrest or detain her upon her arrival, or if found in the city; and this girl, with her fearful mania for poisoning everything and everybody, is left to make her home in any unsuspecting family who may pity her condition, until they are awakened by the Angel of Death folding his black wings about one of their number.

MR. HUGHES' POSITION IN THE BRANSON CASE.

We print the following statement at the request of a gentleman well acquainted with the facts in the Branson case:

The supreme court [illegible] that the [illegible] granted the Oregonian railway company [illegible] to [illegible] the legal title to the original capital stock of the Willamette valley railroad and whatever authority he did have [illegible] in purchasing such stock for it, was exceeded, and abused to such an extent as to preclude any recovery he might otherwise have had against it. The object of the court's decision in setting aside the judgment of Judge Boise, therefore, seems to have been to give to the Oregonian Railway company limited, on the one hand and Mr. Hughes on the other, an opportunity to present the proofs of their assertions, and show to the court in what capacity they acted towards each other in purchasing the Gaston road. Mr. Hughes contended in the case that he bought the stock and deeds of the road on behalf of the directors of the Oregonian Railway company limited, under direct and unconditional authority from them in Dundee to do so. That under said authority, he personally acquired the stock on the 10th of Feb., 1880, and about the same time all of the debts of the Gaston road, numbering about 150, the assignments of which were taken in his own name as "trustee," which these documents show, and were purchased for $120,723, which was obtained from the treasurer of the Dundee owners by Mr. Hughes. That he did not make and never attempted to make any profit therefrom, but acted in such purchase as their "agent and trustee" in good faith. That the [illegible] miles of railroad which he obtained for $120,723 for the Dundee owners, who paid the amount therefor, was after $31,277 had been expended in improving the same, leased to the O. R. & N. Co. at a rental of $25,000 per year, being a net profit obtained by the Oregonian Company, through Mr. Hughes' labors, of $214,000 upon $161,000 invested therein. And now these Dundee owners have the audacity to contend since the freight receipts are held to be debts over the Gaston road, and seeing they cannot get the supreme court to fix the liability therefor upon Holladay and Montgomery that the same ought to be paid by Mr. Hughes, simply because he is the legal holder of the stock of the Gaston road as "trustee" for them, although they were very careful to see and to stipulate, in all their correspondence, that no one was to make a cent of profit, except themselves—a fact which their writings actually state on their face. It is contended, therefore, that if Hughes is to assume the liability for these freight receipts, as the Oregonian company alleges he ought to do, as legal holder of the Gaston stock he is entitled to the profits of $214,000 derived by the Dundee owners from the lease which they made of that road to the O. R. & N. Co., and also to the 7½ per cent. of yearly dividends thereon, or practically to take possession and own the road himself, upon return of the money advanced by the Dundee owners in its purchase and improvement.

We can do as good machine work here as there, our iron ore is of a higher grade than is used in their foundries and our local shops take greater pains in cleaning and finishing their castings. Hence there is no good reason why Portland foundries and machine shops should not control all the machinery trade of the northwest.

THE EAST SIDE.

Frank Harvey, the worst victim of the Pudding river accident, having resumed his duties as brakeman on the O. & C. Road, dislocated his ankle while coupling cars at Oregon City yesterday. Misfortune is evidently on his track. Dr. Dave Raffety, who pulled him through before, is attending him.

The common council having refused to take cognizance of the necessity for a cow ordinance, after its being repeatedly brought to their notice by the press and otherwise, citizens have taken the matter in hand themselves, by circulating a petition praying for the desired object. It is receiving a large number of signatures, including those of many owners of the marauding bovine. It affords some satisfaction to know that the council cannot ignore this petition when presented.

Several loads of brick have been hauled on the site of the proposed gas works, corner of Second and [illegible] streets. It is doubtful, however, if the works will be in operation, according to agreement, by the 1st of April. The work appears to have been retarded through some means. In this connection it might be mentioned that property in the vicinity of the proposed works, has considerably depreciated in value. Its proximity to residence property will undoubtedly render it a nuisance and the neighborhood a very undesirable place in which to reside.

DEVELOPMENT THEORY.

Prof. Condon's Lecture at the Congregational Church Last Evening.

Facts Discovered by the Researches of Great Scientists.

An Interesting and Instructive Discourse on a Subject which has Attracted Much Attention.

The lecture of Prof. Condon on the subject of "The Development Theory," at the Congregational church last evening, attracted a good audience composing the greater part of the scientific and thinking portion of our citizens.

The learned gentleman prefaced his discourse by reading the following extract from a work lately published, not, he said, because it contained anything new, but because it exemplified the doctrine of a certain school:

INTRODUCTORY.

Reasoning a priori, we assume that organisms, both plant and animal, have been created by development from preexistent forms, because it agrees with the general course of nature. All the events in geology as in physics and astronomy being due to the operation of natural laws, it is reasonably supposed that the production of all the species of plants and animals from original simple forms like the monera or bacteria have been the result of natural law. The study of the early forms of life found in the Palæozoic strata; the laws of the succession of types; the correlation existing between the development of the individual and of the members of the class to which it belongs; the parallelism between the formation and differentiation of the land masses of the globe and the successive extinctions and creations of plants and animals. All these facts, notwithstanding the imperfections of the geological record and the fact that many of the older forms of animals were nearly as much specialized as those now living, tend strongly to prove that on the whole the world as it now exists has been the result of progressive development, one form coming genetically from another; the animal and plant worlds constituting two systems of blood relations rather than sets of independent creations." Dr. Packard Zoology 671-2.

EVOLUTION.

The doctrine of theistic evolution; that is, the doctrine that declares evolution to be God's process of creation, is now taught by all the higher colleges of our country.

Among its teachers it enrolls the names of Dr. McCosh, of Princeton college, to represent the Presbyterians; Prof. Dana, of Yale college, to represent the Congregationalist; Prof. Packard, of Brown university, to represent the Baptists. It claims among its seats of learning, Harvard, Dartmouth, Cornell, Michigan university, University of California and many colleges of lesser note.

Although it has this standing among religious teachers, two classes of thinkers still persist in lecturing and sermonizing the public into the belief that the doctrine itself is essentially atheistic. The two classes are, the atheists and the faithful among the theologians. That an atheist should want to usurp this doctrine is not surprising, that an orthodox theologian should help him to succeed, is a matter of surprise and of deep regret. If it concerned the interest of the theologian alone the evil would be less than it is. As it is, the real harm is done to thousands of young people who read enough to know that science accepts some sort of evolution, and who hear from Sabbath sermons that evolution and godliness are inconsistent not only, but destructive of each other.

If these things are stated with anything like fairness to the facts, it ought to be a service to the cause of truth to spread before the public the evidence of the extent to which the development theory has already passed into general acceptance; and also to attempt to show that this acceptance, where accomplished through intelligent weighing of its truth, has no tendency to atheism.

Such is the aim of these pages. No effort will be made to defend or to condemn accepted views—only to record them and their results.

But a few years ago light, heat, electricity, chemical reactions and mechanical motion were supposed to be due to entirely separate acts of creation. It is now clearly seen that these and other physical forces are only separate links of one chain of underlying natural force; It is demonstrated that nothing of this underlying force is ever wasted. The motion of a mill, of an arm, of a steam engine, occurs because heat, or some other link of the chain is changed into motion. The motion thus created expends itself by becoming again heat or electricity, or some other form of the same chain of forces; Nothing of all this is now made or destroyed, nor even wasted.

These things are now the common-place facts of science. The natural effect of them on human thought would be that, whereas we once thought God created light alone, we now know he must have created a wider fact of which light is only a part. And with Christian scientists this was the only effect the change produced. Would that it had been [illegible].

How this view of the truth could lessen any one's adoring reverence of the Infinite Source of all this wider force, and profounder power, is difficult to understand; that it should carry with it a tendency to atheism is incredible, for somewhere in that long chain of sequences the Creator's power must come in. The natural effect upon our belief would be expressed by such a statement as this: "I once believed God created a small fact; I now see he must have created a whole system of facts at once."

This tendency to wider, more generalized facts is the one characteristic of recent scientific experiments. Our thoughts must be adjusted to this current of things if we would keep our theology a thinking power among men.

Still more plainly is this wider generalization marked in the domain of chemistry. In chemistry, as in other departments of science, experiments continually reveal other and wider facts and forces underlying our surface ones.

The discoveries of late years through the use of the spectroscope have added greatly to this conviction. These showed that the distant stars are composed of chemical elements like those of our own earth. This certainly gives [illegible] sufficiently [illegible] idea of the nature of the materials out of which sun, moon and planets are made. If we consider these material as we find them in the rocks around us we shall find evidence enough of development from simple elements to complex combinations.

As a surface fact nothing can be more simple than a piece of chalk; yet if you examine it closely you will find its simplicity to vanish and in the place of that simplicity a most complex combination of chemistry, history and mineralogy. It tells of the lowly life of a company of animals existing in the deep regions of the ocean, millenniums ago, extracting the carbonate of lime from the waters around them and through the wonderful chemical forces of life, converting this lime carbonate into bony skeletons which on the death of the animals are consigned to the deep ocean bottom to become chalk. It tells of a subsequent elevation of this ancient chalk bed into a mountain mass of a neighboring continent. How far from simple, either in time, its place or in chemistry, is this strange mixture of rock and of history.

Yet you may say of this piece of chalk "God created it." So he did, but how? Evidently by a long process of development from simpler elements of time, of force, and of material to what you now find it.

A piece of granite from the hills, any more than those hills themselves, cannot now be regarded as a thing created into its present form by an instantaneous exercise of divine power. If you examine it closely you will find it to be a combination of three other combinations. It is made up of quartz feldspar and mica; the quartz is a combination of silicium and oxygen; the feldspar is a combination of silicic acid and aluminum with either potash or soda; the mica is a combination of silicate alumina, and for a third element, either potash, soda, magnesia, lime or even iron. Surely, here is development in its most marked form, development through combinations complex and varied to present results. And this without at all carrying the argument to the molecules of a stage anterior to these, or to the atoms of a still more remote stage; and yet the changes this material underwent in these preceding stages, are as truly a part of the creation of your piece of granite as the combination of its quartz, feldspar and mica. How plainly then is it true that the creation of a piece of limestone or of granite consists in such a combination of atoms and forces in nature as shall secure these resulting masses, and that time, and often a good deal of it, enters into such combinations, making their existence itself a history of changes.

Let it be remembered that the object here is not to impress the hearer with a fact in chemistry or in mineralogy, but with the fact of a creation through development accepted throughout Christendom for the last hundred years or more, by the religious of all parties, and without any known tendency to atheism. It is not easy to see why the wider act of creation should have less need of a creator than the narrower one, or that these general systems of nature should have any less need of a plan and a designer than the more special ones of our older thought. There is in both the same need of a creator. The wider systems as well as the narrower ones will show their missing links. What matters it where these missing links occur?

"From nature's chain whatever link you strike, Tenth or ten-thousandth breaks the chain alike."

If the power and wisdom of a creating God stands behind that missing link, no matter where it occurs, in the creation of a piece of granite itself, or of the atoms of which it is composed. And yet one might say in passing of these missing links in all systems that there is no obvious gain in making the argument from design to hang rather on the absent than upon the present link, as if a broken link in a chain should be made to commend the skill of the mechanic more than if it were unbroken.

Several years ago the astronomer La Place published a hypothesis of development applied to the solar system, in which the claim was made that the sun, moon and planets were not created one by one from nothing by divine power; but that the matter of which they are composed once existed diffused through space; that this matter was drawn together by the mutual attraction of its particles; was condensed into such position as to give play to its chemical forces; that this condensation developed motion in the whole mass, causing it to revolve around its center of gravity; that the increase of this motion resulted in the casting off of its outer portion into space, which outcast mass would in time become planets, and moons, circling around the central mass, and that our present sun is this great central residue of all this.

With the great mass of the world's educated thinkers this explanation of God's mode of creating the solar system has passed from the domain of hypothesis to that of accepted theory—one capable of explaining facts in this connection not capable of explanation on any other theory.

No one now thinks of objecting to it on the ground of its giving a substitute in its explanations for the power of God and thus promoting atheism, although this was often done when the hypothesis was first published. You need not be reminded that this nebular hypothesis is one of development as applied to the solar system.

But the field of scientific work which of all others shows the most marked change in the use of the word create is that of geology. But a little while ago it was generally believed that mountains were created as such and from nothing.

It is now clearly seen that the mountain mass once existed in different form, perhaps extended over a plain or a sea bed, occupying the very place now occupied by the mountain, and that at an earlier period the materials that now constitute its rocky mass existed as a plastic mass of mud carried to this very place by neighboring rivers.

Or if we take for our illustration a still more specific case. It is strictly correct to say God created this mountain west of Portland [illegible] what do we mean by creating [illegible] In a certain [illegible] at least [illegible] If we turn to the [illegible] we find [illegible] layer, and ask [illegible] ground up material [illegible] of fossils and traces of [illegible] shales and [illegible] sediments from decaying leaves and [illegible] by [illegible] which this surface soil was brought to its present condition of usefulness. If we examine the layer underlying this surface one, that of the boulder clay, we shall find a few stretches of history to mark its preparation for its place. The drift of the glacier that brought its heavy boulder masses to their present place, the history of those casual pieces of granite that seem so far out of place among porphyries and basalts as to suggest an iceberg journey from some northern shore—all these fragments of story unavoidably come into our conception of the creation of the boulder drift that constitutes the second layer of your Portland mountain. Then we shall find ourselves in the presence of the basaltic layers of what were once, without doubt great lava flows over level causeways long since eroded by deep valleys or narrow ravines until the direction of their outflow seems now almost incredible.

We now reach the basement sedimentary rock upon which all this upbuilding has been erected. You will find it in a few places cropping out in the river bank at low water. It extends back under the mountain to Tualatin plains; it forms the foothills around the plains; it borders the valley forming its foothills through South Tualatin, Wapato lake, Amity, Albany, Eugene, and back down the valley on the east to Portland again. It is an old sea bed. Throughout its extent its fossil remains are well marked, and definitely fix the time in which its seashells, its star fishes, and its sharks lived at home in its waters. The materials of sand and mud out of which these sandstones and shales were made, were brought here from higher lands, so that to the very foundation of our mountain base we find ourselves looking back to an earlier period for part of the agencies that make up the history of our mountain mass. Such, in brief, is the natural history of this mountain west of Portland.

Now, if we say as we have an undoubted right to say, "God created this mountain," I am compelled by the facts of the case to define created, as developed through a long continued series of changes, in which heat and frost, sea and land, stream and flood and tide, all did their share.

We reach a like conclusion if the object of our study be the natural history of some river channel. Look for illustration, at that of our own Columbia. Of this, too we may say, and say properly, God created it, the whole of it. But what does this act of creation imply? Let us see:

The long, winding stream of water we call the Columbia river is a vast thread that binds into geographical oneness regions wide apart, and strangely varied, but united in this one tie of an extended water course.

Similar to this is its place in time: here, too, it becomes a thread that ties together widely dissimilar chapters of geological history. Let us try to recall two or three of these:

That we may get a glimpse of the first of these restorations of past history, it is requisite that we imagine the stream of time rolled back 100,000 years or more.

This done and we shall find the water-shed of the Columbia river of that period occupying in the main, the same region it does now, and yet, along its whole course it will seem wondrously changed. It was then in its lower or western portion a broad, winding strait, bearing the same relation to the interior that Fuca straits do now to Puget sound. A broad beautiful bay extended southward from this strait to where Eugene City now stands, fringed with deep inlets, into which mountain streams poured from the same valleys these streams now occupy. This broad stretch of inland water, let us call the Willamette sound.

Another, and a far greater extension of the Columbia river, stretched from where Walla Walla now stands to the Yakima valley, making here, too, an extensive inland sea.

Still another extension reached from Snake river to the westward to and including the present Klamath marsh. No facts in the natural history of the country are plainer than the evidences of these former extensions of this great water course.

Nor was this the beginning; far from it. If now we take another step into the great past, we shall find still the same Columbia river, but now only as a connecting series of links between frequent lakes, large and small. A river whose banks were covered with palms, whose lakes and streams were frequented by the rhinoceros, the wild horse, dwarfed and giant, the tapir, the camel and many stranger forms long since passed away.

At the time of this earlier chapter the present Willamette valley was in open broad straits communication with the sea.

If now with this extended view of its past history each epoch of which helped to form the succeeding one, we say God created the Columbia river valley, we of necessity are held to imply through a long development of forms and materials and forces like those now at work around us. That among these were the heat of internal fires, the frost of unnumbered winters, changes of level and changes in living forms on its banks,—which of course amounts to an acknowledgement that we regard the development theory as defining God's process of creating the Columbia river.

What is here said of mountain mass or of river channel, applies with like force to the creation of a whole continent.

Our own continent began its history as such eons ago as a long strip of elevated sea bed extending westward and northward from our present Labrador. To this nucleus were added through long periods of time and by the natural agencies of flood and tide and the life and death of plant and of animal, successive strips of land, each strip having at once a separate history of its own and a wider historical connection with the whole continent. So plainly is this so that the whole geological history is now conceded to be a marked instance of a grand system of development with plan and purpose in its movements although conducted through ages of change and the agencies of nature.

Age after age thus left their record until our continent reached its present southern extension in Florida and the gulf coast, and its western extension along the shores of our coast range of the Pacific. To these successive areas added to the continent geologists have applied the names Laurentian, Silurian, Devonian, Carboniferous, Jurassic, Cretaceous, Eocene, Miocene, Post Tertiary, each one of these names representing in succession a period of time and an area added to the continent. They stand toward each other in three lines of relationship. First—They stand towards each other in the relation of parts to a whole continent, each part in such relation to the whole that it could not possibly fit anywhere else. Second—They stand to each other and to the whole in the relation of succession in history. In this relation to the whole continent the place of each period is as necessarily where it is as that of part to the whole. The third relation is that of derivation. As before stated each successive addition to the continent was an off-shore sea bed near the former land, the muddy sediment of which had been for ages wearing from the uplands; had been carried to the sea by neighboring rivers and distributed by tides and currents; had at length been elevated into dry land to form another, an added field to our continental form. Thus it was that each added area was derived from the eroded surface of its parent country, adding the relation of direct derivation to the other ties that bind the whole into one great natural development. Of course in all this, whether taken from the history of a hill, a river, valley, or a continent, we are treating of unorganic forces and developments, life as yet has not come into the question.

And now, before we carry our subject beyond the line that separates the organic from the inorganic, let us sum up our conclusions drawn from this part of our subject:

With our minds directed especially to the truths of chemistry, we may state that it was once believed that God created granite directly from nothing. The educated world now believes that God created the ultimate atoms and the forces that govern their relations; and that these acted on by their surroundings, made the granite. The difference is surely this: The older belief ascribed to God the creation of innumerable separate facts; the newer thought ascribes to God the creation of a system that results in these.

The system among scientists prevails, for all modern researches tend towards system. Only an added evidence that God works by system.

If we direct our inquiries to the domain of geology a similar result follows. Educated men find the evidence overwhelming that God did not create at once the whole continent as men once believed, but that he so directed natural agencies and materials that the natural forces of these acted on by their surroundings developed a continent.

Here too the change is to a generalization. God did not stop to create a single fact, he created a vast system of facts.

And as in both these departments of thought, that of chemistry and that of geology, the religious world have accepted these changed views without conscious detriment to religious faith it must follow that development as a form of creation, as God's process of creation in at least some departments of his work is an accepted doctrine and is not atheistic.

But let us now go back a little in our geological history of the continent.

It will be remembered that the development of our continent was described as progressive elevations of new portions of sea bed into so many added fields to an old farm.

If now we add the statement that each of these annexed fields was in its turn stocked with plants and animals suitable to its period we have the opening of the other half of our subject, development as applied to plants and animals.

It will be remembered that there were designated ten or more of these annexed fields during the whole period of geological history. All through this history running through millions of years there were, side by side, two kingdoms of life, that of the plant, the vegetable kingdom, that of the animal, the animal kingdom. During all this time the inter relations of field and flora and of field and fauna were such that each province of each kingdom fits where it is and would fit no where else. This triple relationship suggests a wider system to which these parts are essential in time, in rank and in unity to the whole.

The perception of this great geological system of plants as well as of animals long since suggested to Prof. Agassiz what was known as his system of evolution, an essentially embryonic one, and therefore not dependent on surroundings.

The other type of evolution is that of variations promoted by surroundings and is best represented by the Darwinian system. Neither of these attempt to account for the origin of life itself. They are both content to ascribe this to God.

The scripture texts that relate to the introduction of life into the world are the following:

[illegible]

Beyond this their views separate, the evolutionist claiming that God created the possibility of the whole system in the first germ of life, and so consigns it to the development of the natural world. To him, then, these passages from Genesis open a vision of a vast stream of life, beginning millions of years ago in the dawn of the [illegible], increasing naturally as it flowed on through the successive additions to the continent, rapidly enlarging as it [illegible]

[illegible]

Suppose now the question were asked what will the development theory take on the faith of Christendom? It might be presumptive to attempt to give a direct answer to so grave an inquiry, but if we consult history for parallels from the past, these may help us form a judgment. About 300 years ago a new hypothesis of the solar system was published by the astronomer Copernicus. As this theory was adopted by Galileo and demonstrated by the help of his newly invented telescope. But the church was alarmed and asked the question: What will become of the faith of Christendom if these new scriptural views of the sun and the earth are generally accepted? The poor astronomer of the telescope was condemned for heresy and compelled to retract his published convictions on pain of the penalty due to heresy. The heresy triumphed. Europe accepted the new views, but did not give up the faith of Christendom. This certainly was a case in point and ought to have its moral for us. Years passed and a new scientific heresy was published—that of the great antiquity of the earth—6000 years would not cover the [illegible] history geologists saw in the rocks. The theological cry was again raised and in almost the same inquiry. What will become of the faith of Christendom if these views are accepted? Well, time passed, the longer chronology was generally accepted, and the faith of Christendom seemed rather to improve under the change.

But yet another strain was in store for the relation between theology and science. The evidence of several lines of scientific inquiry seemed to point to a longer human antiquity than the received one.

Again the old cry was raised of atheism and infidelity against the innovators, and again the newer views prevailed without much apparent change in the faith of Christendom. That these periodic conflicts between theology and science have been entirely harmless, no well informed person will claim.

The church cannot put herself in a position of chronic antagonism to science without harm.

But in opening out this subject, so that we may see how much of evolution we ourselves believe; and also in enumerating the evidences that our colleges are already teaching it to our young without taint of atheism, I have done the work proposed for these pages.

That the wise and the good of the nineteenth century are about to let these doctrines make atheists or even infidels of the rising generation, I cannot believe. That they are necessarily destructive of faith, I believe as little. That the American church may, through their help, be able to cast aside a good deal of worthless teaching, and rise to a higher plane of working power, is far more legitimate to the signs of the times.

At the close of the lecture Professor Condon was loudly applauded, and many old friends crowded around to greet him and renew their acquaintance.

NEW YORK FREIGHTS AND MARKETS.

NEW YORK, Feb. 16.—A heavy storm for the past few days has put a damper on all movements in the freight market, and but very little has been done. However, there is a good feeling throughout the market, and a free movement is prevented only by a scarcity of ships, of which there are only two in berth, one in each line. The Charles Dennis sailed yesterday morning with 26,500 tons cargo, comprising in part, 50 tons castings, 250 barrels sugar, and 100 barrels pitch, 650 barrels rosin, 214 casks palm oil, 146 barrels whisky, 250 bales hemp, 600 kegs nails, and a large quantity of iron wagon stock.

General markets as a rule remain quiet. There are some few exceptions, but nearly every department of trade appears to be simply drifting. A while ago business men were waiting for the holidays to pass, now they are waiting for the congress to get away from Washington, and after the fourth of March they will perhaps be waiting for an extra session of the new congress to do something. Wheat is active and dearer. Telegraphic advices of damage to the California wheat crop from severe cold and dry weather were not without influence on our market. California merchandise is quiet for all kinds except wool, in which there is some movement. Sales, 85 bales and 2000 pounds, at 21 cents. Quicksilver, in a jobbing way, is offered at 37 cents, but round lots are not realizing but 35@36.

Home Comfort.

After a Rainy Ride a Country Physician Tells What He Thinks of Some People.

"I wish to gracious some people would learn when they need a doctor and when they don't," exclaimed Dr. [illegible] as he entered his house in a cosey little village in the interior of the State of New York, after a tedious night ride of many miles. "I have been down among the mountains to see a man, who the messenger said, was very sick and not likely to live till morning, unless he had immediate help and found him suffering from a rather sharp attack of colic which his family might have relieved in ten minutes, if they had a grain of sense and two or three simple remedies in the house. But no! they must remain ignorant as pigs, and when the least ache or pain takes them, send for a doctor, whether they ever pay him or not."

"Why, Doctor, what kind of simple remedies do you expect people to keep in the house?" asked his wife, as she poured him a cup of hot tea.

"In this case," answered the Doctor, "if they had only put a BENSON'S CAPCINE POROUS PLASTER on the man's stomach, he would have been all right in an hour, and saved me a dreary ride."

In all ordinary complaints it cures at once.

All diseases are eliminated from the system by what may be roughly called expulsion or extraction, or by a union of the two processes. Benson's Plaster promotes both. It invites the torpid organs to act, and sends its healing, soothing influence through the myriad pores of the skin. All other plasters oblige the patient to wait. They give him hope for to-morrow. Benson's Plaster gives him help to-day. Which is better do you think? Buy the CAPCINE and keep it in the house. Price, 25 cents.
